1. Decorative rather than structural in function, these carved, fluted Italian columns, set on sturdy plinths, are circa 1840. Circa Interiors & Antiques, circainteriors.com

2. This nineteenth-century Swedish bleached oak chest-on-chest commode separates into two parts. A styled and shaped front gives the commode an outstanding profile, its undulating surface resembling breaking waves. Fireside Antiques, firesideantiques.com

3. Make a statement by sitting on this oblong teak-root bench, 40 W" w. x 12" d. x 16" h., an accessory that works in any room setting. FOUND, foundforthehome.com

4. A tribulum, or grain threshing tool, was once used in the mountains of France. A farm animal would pull the sledge while the stone chips aided in the separating process. Back Row Home, backrowhome.com

5. Noted for its engaging patterned back and subtly rolling armrests, the sturdy Nozay chair comes in a naturally hued teak. Accents of France, accentsoffrance.com

6. The Diane table, in solid oak, has a fixed section but can be enlarged with hinged leaves, shown in natural oak with a varnish finish. Belgian Pearls Home Collection available through Defleure, defleure.com

7. Inspired by a nineteenth-century spindle-turned chair, the Great Bear dog bed from HOWE London, provides a luxurious comfort for your pet. The frame is made of beech, available in a finish of choices, with the best-quality pure down cushion. howelondon.com
